“What’s it Worth?”

From our earliest days, we most likely wonder what is important in life. We absorb attitudes from adults as to what should be on the priority list. Obviously, survival instincts surface more than any other emotion. In our vulnerable human condition, we need to develop a protection approach so that accidents, ill health, negligence, and intrusiveness do not jeopardize our continuance of life.

From the earliest scriptures recorded, we are advised that human kind must survive by the “sweat of its brow.” In other words, we are expected to work to generate resources to survive so as to assure not only our own sustenance, but also that of those dependent and related to us. In this fashion, we accumulate such resources, essentially money, to provide for our future. However, the accumulation of wealth is not the primary goal of life as much as it is a means to an end. More important than accumulating material wealth is the richness of relationships, specifically between each of us with God and then with others. These bonds are what make life meaningful and totally purposeful.

As we go about our daily work, hopefully productive and fulfilling work, which provides the wherewithal for a reasonable lifestyle, may we see our companions on the journey as if they were the deserving presence of the Lord Jesus! They are the ones toward whom we show the compassion, support, and love that we might show to Christ himself. For those with special needs, be they the sick, the homebound, the homeless, the alienated, the disturbed, or the dependent, our reaching out as Christ would is the ideal.

From an eternal viewpoint, our eternal wealth is what we do with our material wealth of opportunity and resources. May relationships be at the top of our list of treasured considerations! Keep in touch with the Lord daily, and relate as best you can with all you encounter.

Blessings,
Father Vincent T. Kelly
